

Paul Bevan

“I love the way contemporary dance combines physical performance with artistic expression: at its best dance is powerful and inspiring”

Paul has 25 years experience in local and regional government, twelve of these in leadership roles delivering organisational change. He played a leading part in creating the new city council for Brighton and Hove and has since created, grown and sustained a new partnership Assembly for a region of over eight million people. Through the South East England Regional Assembly Paul works with and represents 74 local authorities of diverse politics and character, as well as economic, social and environmental stakeholders. The Assembly is the voice of the South East and is responsible for regional planning, transport and housing.

Paul’s previous local government career spans urban regeneration, planning and economic development in Brighton and East Sussex; he also has private sector experience in the IT industry.

A first class honours graduate with an MA in politics, Paul is experienced in contributing to and influencing policy development at both the UK and European levels.
